Week 7

This week the kids had fun making chocolate chip cookies for their dad's as well as a special Father's Day craft. I was so impressed with the way all the students helped cleanup afterwards too. The level of responsibility that they are showing blows me away.

Another super fun activity that the kids have loved this week is the garden. They have enjoyed talking to the plants with kid words and telling them to grow strong. They love picking radishes, lettuce, kale, basil, and chard. The best part is that they get to wash it outside at our new washing table and bring it home to their families.

But above all, my favorite moment this week was when we did a puppet show. We have had trouble lately using kind words to each other, so we practiced with puppets by acting out scenarios and having the puppets behave in the wrong way and then the right way. The kids loved it. The best part was afterwards when a little tiff would come up among the kids, I would ask them "What would your puppet do", then they would think about it for a second and respond to each other in a respectful way. It was adorable!
